Financial Advisor Selection

Choosing your strategic partners

"Your choice of people to associate with... is one of the most important choices you make. If you associate with turkeys, you will never fly with the eagles."

Brian Tracy

Learning about managing your financial affairs is a critical life skill to develop but there comes a time when all except the most extreme do-it-yourselfer choose to bring in some outside help.

The decision of which experts to enlist to help you navigate your financial affairs could be one of the most important wealth management decisions you make in life. It affects your peace of mind, your retirement lifestyle and who you associate with, it affects the legacy you are able to leave your heirs, and the task faced by your estate executors in resolving your affairs. It affects your life partners and family.

The first step in this process is building some awareness in personal financial planning. Many factors affect your personal financial plan and there are many variables in life that can make your plans different from the person sitting beside you, factors that are not always readily apparent on the surface. With an awareness of some of the elements of financial planning, you can begin to get an understanding of the issues most relevant to your situation.

Having a basic understanding of the issues you are facing will partially prepare you for seeking out expert assistance in ensuring you are doing the right thing with your financial affairs but it is not enough.

This workshop will help build your awareness of the different options in choosing experts you want to work with. It presumes that investment management is one element but not the only element of successfully managing your finances.

Upon completion, you should be aware of your options, of some industry terminology, and various considerations to choose the right match for you.

TOTAL “NO” RESPONSES | ☐
How many “NO” points did you get?
Refer your point total to these general summaries:

Five points or less...
Looking sharp. Remember – financial planning is an ongoing process. It requires regular review and evaluation to ensure strategies will achieve goals.

Six to sixteen points...
Some problems with overall financial picture. Financial plan needs to be improved in order to achieve financial goals.

Seventeen to thirty-two points...
Greater focus needed. Use the resources available to develop a comprehensive financial plan.
The Financial Planning Process

The foundation of the Financial Planning process is understanding your cash flow over time. You need to think about how that is going to change over time, what are the tax consequences, what are the risks to your cash flow, and how can you strategize to maximize your cash flow.

Integrated financial planning may involve legal strategies, tax strategies, use of insurance and financial products to achieve your goals.

Financial planning is a very personalized process because it is driven by a multitude of factors that are very family-specific, such as:

- Personality
- Risks
- Resources
- Medical
- Leaving a Legacy
- Education
- Leisure
- Basic Lifestyle
- Personal Factors

The person or team involved in advising you must be able to integrate the relevant factors and develop solutions (if possible) that reflect all the family’s issues.
Life Stage Planning Periods

When putting together a plan to manage your financial affairs, it is worth thinking about the typical life stages people go through. While those might not be applicable to all people, it is a starting point for considering what may become critical components to your strategy.

- Early career
- Mid-career
- Peak accumulation
- Pre-retirement
- Retirement

Stages and What Happens

Early career (20-35)
1) Education
2) First house
3) First car
4) Marriage

2) Travel
3) Re-entry to work force from child care responsibilities

Peak accumulation (50-60)

2) Children finished school
3) Pay off mortgage
4) Accelerated investing

Pre-retirement (60-65)
1) Firming up retirement date
2) Parent dependents
3) Estate

Retirement (65-100)
1) Maintaining comfortable lifestyle
2) Revising estate plans

Unplanned Curve Ball

Investment Management

When it comes to financial affairs, many people confuse financial planning with investment management. In fact, investment management is just one component of financial planning. That said, an investment manager can be in a strong position to provide input on the overall financial plan because he/she often gets to know a lot about your circumstances. Furthermore, almost all financial planners work hand-in-hand with a particular investment management process. To begin the task of choosing an investment manager or financial planner, first it is critical to understand the various ways that you can get your investments managed. See if you can identify the process you have in place right now.

Anatomy of the Investment Industry

Stock Exchanges
(Toronto, New York, …)

Institutional Stock Brokerages
(Merrill Lynch, Morgan Stanley, Bank-owned brokerages…)

Discount Retail Stock Broker
(i-trade, Waterhouse)

Full Service Retail Stock Broker
(Wood Gundy, Nesbitt, Dominion Securities)

Investment Counsellor/Portfolio Managers

Investment Counsellor/PMs
(HowsonTatterall, Sionna, Sky, Bonavista…)

Mutual Fund Firms
(Trimark, MacKenzie, AIC, the Banks…)

Mutual Fund Administration

Mutual Fund Marketing

Mutual Fund Dealers
(Investors Group, Partners in Planning, Dundee, Berkshire, Banks, Insurance Co’s)

Relationship Managers/
"Financial Advisors"

Clients
There are four primary ways to get your investments managed. There are also some fringe methods such as private mortgages, owning real estate, some quasi-investment products offered through insurance companies, and GICs/Canada Savings Bonds sold through bank branches.

Of the big four, the most common solution from days gone by was the traditional full service stock broker.

Mutual Funds

In about the late 1970s and early 1980s mutual funds became popular. A mutual fund is simply a group of investors pooling their money together to have it work more efficiently. For the average investor there were several factors that created challenges working with stock brokers that drove the success of mutual funds.

Trading commissions were high and investors usually bought in board lots (large quantities of shares) to get decent purchase prices. To avoid high trading costs and odd lot purchases, investors with a modest sized portfolio would buy big quantities of just a few stocks. This was a big problem. This might be ok if you want to gamble on a couple stocks with a bit of your money but for anyone with their retirement savings on the table, their brokerage account was usually not well diversified. This is not prudent investing. The mutual funds got around this problem by pooling the money.

The second issue is that stock brokers are not typically trained at analyzing companies for investment. This meant a lot of investing was done with little or poor analysis. On the other hand, investment counselors, who were normally reserved for the super-rich, could be available to regular investors if they pooled their money through mutual funds. Access to professional investment analysis was a key factor in the marketing of mutual funds to the public. Various companies made healthy profits creating and marketing mutual fund pools to the public.

Discount Brokers

Then in the early 2000s discount stock brokers came onto the market. The discount broker business was really driven by two factors. First the IT boom had really pushed down the cost of many elements of brokerage. Secondly, people started to wonder why they were paying for a broker who was adding little value. The discount brokerage solution was very much a low cost do-it-yourself solution to avoid full service brokerage fees that can kill returns.

Investment Counsel/Portfolio Managers

Through all that time, investment counselors existed for the ultra-rich and gradually started serving smaller and smaller clients. First they served them through retail mutual fund dealers, and later, as investment management costs declined, began serving them directly. Higher net worth families tend to gravitate to investment counselors because there is a higher level of service and there are fewer people in between the client and the person actually making the detailed investment decisions so they get a clearer picture of what’s going on and get lower fees than mutual funds that can sometimes amount to 3-4% or more.

The Offering of Funds

- Through Mutual Fund Dealers
- Through Stock Brokers
- Directly through Portfolio Managers

Confusion Sets In

Recently a couple of factors have created confusion as to who you are dealing with in Ontario. First of all the term “investment counsel” has been dropped as a category and so now just the term “Portfolio Manager” is used. Unfortunately, anybody could call themselves a portfolio manager so the term doesn’t clarify what you get.

Various people offer mutual funds. Through various arrangements, both full service and discount stock brokers now sell mutual funds too. In addition, insurance salespeople often sell mutual funds.

Also, Portfolio Managers (PMs) often offer mutual funds or pools. The difference is that when a PM offers pools, they are normally pools that the PM (which also carries an investment fund manager license) is managing, not funds being sold on behalf of another company.
Licensing of Investment People

- OSC
- MFDA
- IIROC

Often the simplest way to get an understanding of the role a particular advisor plays and how he/she fits into the puzzle is to ask under what organization he/she is licensed.

There are basically three organizations in Ontario that take care of licensing.

1) The Ontario Security Commission is a government body. It takes care of registering Portfolio Managers and Fund Managers (not to be confused with fund dealers). Note that Portfolio Manager and Investment Fund Manager are company-level registrations, not individual registrations. For individuals in those firms, the license is usually “Advising Representative.” These people are the backbone of the investment management industry. They run pension funds, mutual funds, foundations and endowments, and direct investment management for high net worth people.

The OSC also takes care of registering stock brokerage firms and mutual fund dealer firms, BUT NOT the individual sales people.

2) The licensing of stock brokers is handled by IIROC, a self-regulatory organization (i.e. the brokerages, as a group, run the organization that licenses individual brokers). IIROC stands for Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada.

3) Similarly, a self-regulatory organization called the MFDA (Mutual Fund Dealers Association) takes care of the licensing of mutual fund salespeople.

So simply ask a person, are you part of IIROC, the MFDA, or registered directly by the OSC and you should see where the person fits into the puzzle.

You could say the licensing of salespeople has been subcontracted out.
Discretionary Authority

A “financial advisor” can manage your investments on a discretionary or a non-discretionary basis. Discretionary means that the investment manager has been given blanket authority up front to conduct the transactions to manage your investments to the best of his ability. He does not get trade-by-trade authorization. Obviously a Portfolio Manager running a mutual fund has discretionary authority. It isn’t imaginable that the fund manager could get all of the fund’s unitholders to agree on a particular stock purchase, let alone do it in a reasonable time.

Similarly, Portfolio Managers managing accounts directly for families, tend to have discretionary authority (as laid out in the agreement with the client). That does not mean the PM can do absolutely anything. For example if the investment management agreement said that yours was a conservative portfolio with no more than 30% of the money in stocks and the rest in bonds, then the PM would have to stay within those ranges.

Discretionary authority is important for two major reasons. First of all, if you are a snow bird down south, are hospitalized, or when you die and your investments are in your estate, you want the comfort of knowing that proper action is being taken, even if you are not available. Secondly, without it, approvals are required and that can stall proper action.
For example, if a mutual fund sales person saw that corrective action needed to be taken and that salesperson had 900 clients (not unheard of in the mutual fund world) and had to meet them face to face to get the correction made, then with 4 meetings per day it would take 225 working days (i.e. a full year) to get the portfolios all changed. Frustrating if you’re last! That doesn’t even count time for the salesperson to find new clients.

Discretionary authority is conceptually similar to the authority you would give a trustee if you set up a trust. That trustee is required to do what is in the best interests of the beneficiaries. A PM with discretionary authority must act similarly.

IIROC licensed stock brokers and MFDA licensed mutual fund sales people are NOT ALLOWED to have discretionary authority; they can only have non-discretionary authority.

How involved would you like to be?

Investment Styles

- Value-Growth Continuum
- Deep value
- Value
- Growth/Reasonable Price (GARP)
- Growth
- Technical/Momentum Investing
- Indexing/Buy and Hold/Passive
- Blend of all styles

While we investment managers all feel that investment style is important, in reality the most crucial two items are diversification and rebalancing.

Crucial Portfolio Management

- Diversify: 30-100 securities
- Rebalance: quarterly

All prudent portfolios should be diversified. Ideally, your portfolio should hold no less than 30 individual securities and no more than roughly 100. If you choose to go with funds, instead of individual securities, ask how many securities are in each fund and if there are any overlaps. One exception to the 100 security limit would be an S&P 500 index fund that has exposure to almost 500 stocks.
Advisor Compensation

Depending on the type of advisor you work with, you will be charged fees in different ways. Every compensation structure will inevitably have its biases. Below are the typical compensation structures, but there are many other variations.

How You Might Pay

- Sales commissions
- Ongoing management fees
- Transaction fees
- Account administration fees
- Hourly fees/Flat per-service fees
- Performance fees

Transaction Fees
The most common transaction fee is the trading commission charged by a brokerage for trading stocks. The fee can be quite modest for a discount broker or quite high for a full service broker. There is typically a fee for buying and then another fee for selling.

With transaction fees, there is a risk that the advisor will coax you to trade more than necessary in your account to generate fees. Conversely, if you are not willing to trade, you might get ignored.

Sales Commission
These generally occur for mutual fund dealers. Common terminology is Front End Load or Deferred Sales Charge (DSC). When the advisor sells you a fund with a load or sales charge, they get a sales commission. DSC generally means you get penalized with a fee if you take your money out early because the fund company has already given the commission to the salesperson. DSCs normally decline over 5-7 years, depending on the fund. Some mutual fund sales people will sell you a fund with a front load of zero percent. This means they are not taking a sales commission.

There are at least two risks with sales commissions. First of all occasionally, a new fund that is trying to win new clients will pay the mutual fund salesperson an above average sales commission to steer prospective clients to the fund. The fund may not be your best option.

Secondly, when a person is compensated on sales commissions, there is a risk that once you are a client they will focus on getting new clients rather than serving your account.

Ongoing Management Fees
Management fees are earned by portfolio managers, mutual fund salespeople (called trailers) and stock brokers if they sell you a wrap account. A wrap account is one where you are charged a percentage of assets fee instead of a per-trade brokerage commission. Management fees paid to the relationship manager are intended to compensate for managing the client relationship.
The risk with management fees is that the person will want to manage more of your assets in order to earn more fees.

Account Administration Fees
These fees are one way certain firms earn profits while making their management cost look inexpensive. For example, some discount brokerages might charge an RRSP administration fee while others waive the fee. Some may also charge a minimum fee if there are no trades to generate commissions. Administration fees really hurt the profitability of small accounts so watch for them.

Hourly and Flat Per-Service Fees
These fees are usually charged for advisory work by financial planners. The fees could be for financial planning, direction on a will, creating/managing a tax reduction strategy, or establishing an investment asset allocation.

The risk with hourly fees is that the advisor coaxes you to get more work done to generate more fees.

Performance Fees
These fees are usually reserved for specialty high net worth hedge funds and can commonly cost 20% of profits above a certain predefined level. They are often charged in addition to a management fee. In a way, performance fees are the best aligned with investor goals but they are usually so excessive, and in addition to standard fees, that they become unappealing.

Paying for A and Expecting to get B
One trap people always fall into is expecting to get B when the advisor is compensated for A.

If you are hoping to get extensive financial planning from an advisor who is compensated through product sales commissions you will be undoubtedly let down. In all likelihood the advisor will do just enough financial planning to land you as a client and not a bit more. Unfortunately there is a steady stream of people lured into thinking they can get something for nothing.

Even if the advisor were willing to put together a financial plan for you, it is probable that he has done so few that he does not have the skill set with completing one.
Separately Managed Accounts vs Pools

Since some stock brokers and PMs offer separately managed accounts (SMAs) and pools, which is right for you? There are pros and cons to each.

First of all, some people have the sense that pools such as mutual funds are safer. In general the risk is a function of which securities are owned. If the same securities were owned in the pool or the SMA, that would represent the same risk. Safety comes from prudent structuring of the stocks, bonds, etc. into a well diversified portfolio that’s appropriate for you.

Alphabet Soup
We’ve all seen people with an alphabet soup of acronyms on their business card behind their name. What does it all mean?

Is the Designation Worth Anything?
- Licensing designations
- Educational designations
- Industry Associations

As mentioned previously, there are basically three licensing categories:
- OSC registration of PM companies and Registered Representatives
- IIROC registration of stock brokers
- MFDA registration of mutual fund salespeople.

It is also common to see LLQP, which is the designation to sell life, disability, and critical illness insurance.

Education

The two most important designations are the CFA for people actually analyzing/choosing securities and the CFP for people focused on financial planning.

The CFA Charter (from the CFA Institute) is a 3 year/3 exam program that requires completion of a university degree. It is a global designation. Becoming a CFA Charterholder is extremely difficult. For most exams only about 1/3 of students pass. That means that only about 3-5% of the people who start out in the program get through all three exams without failing any. Many people who complete the CFA program have a Masters of Business Administration (MBA), masters of finance, or at least a business degree before they attempt the CFA program. The program also requires 2 years of related work experience.

The CFP designation (from the FPSC) is focused on financial planning. It also has a work experience requirement. The CFP designation requires completion of a series of courses culminating in a course on comprehensive financial planning.

Unfortunately, many salespeople have realized that the CFP designation is useful in winning new clients and so they carry the designation without and intent to carry out any financial planning.

IFIC, CSC
These are very basic courses/exams used to license advisors.

Advocis
This is an industry association targeting financial planners that has traditionally drawn its membership from the insurance industry.
